

Home / News / FASEA Adds Courses, Prior Learning Credits

FASEA ADDS COURSES, PRIOR LEARNING CREDITS

The Financial Adviser Standards and Ethics Authority (FASEA) has approved a number of courses and education credits from prior coursework as part of its education standards for advisers.

---

by Sarah Simpkins - August 12, 2019 7 comments

---

The government body has approved three bridging courses from Queensland University of Technology, for advisers to meet the education standard. The programs were said to align with FASEA's required curriculum and standards.

Since 2017, the body has approved a range of courses including 66 historical courses, 63 current bachelor or higher degrees and 27 bridging courses.

"The approval of these additional bridging courses builds on the body of courses approved by FASEA and approves additional choice to advisers seeking to meet the education standard by 1 January 2024," Stephen Glenfield, chief executive, FASEA said.

Meanwhile advisers who have completed coursework to attain a CIMA professional designation from the Portfolio Construction Forum in 2001 or afterwards have been awarded one credit recognition for prior learning.

Advisers who have completed coursework to attain the Chartered Financial Analyst designation offered by CFA Societies Australia have been awarded one credit for prior learning.

Advertisement